Course Description

This specialization is designed to boost the international and inter-sectoral mobility experiences of PhD students by preparing you to cooperate with non-governmental organisations (NGOs) active in the fields of development processes, democratization, and the promotion and defence of human rights. During a 30-hour course, professors Galia Chimiak (IFiS PAN), Magdalena Grabowska (IFiS PAN), and Su-Ming Khoo (National University of Ireland – Galway), together with invited NGO practitioners, will provide in-depth insights into the structure of NGOs and their roles in development, civil society mobilisation for social justice, intersectoral cooperation, and transdisciplinary activist research. The GSSR-held course is the mandatory building block of the specialization.

The internships with NGOs in Poland or Ireland are a strongly recommended, yet optional, follow-up to the course. By cooperating with NGOs, you gain intersectoral experience that enhances your education and social capital, thus strengthening your employability upon graduation from GSSR.

Internships can span from one month (in Poland) to three months (Ireland) and should be completed by December 30, 2022 or earlier, if you plan to graduate prior to this date. On average, a month-long internship involves ca. 50 hours of work.

To identify and approach the NGO of choice, students work closely with the instructors. Thanks to the NAWA STER grant, GSSR provides, on a competitive basis, funding for travel and living abroad for internships in Ireland. While interning with an NGO in or around Dublin, you can access Trinity College Dublin’s (TCD) library, thus having an excellent opportunity to read towards your PhD thesis.

All GSSR students are eligible for the specialization course held at GSSR and internships with NGOs in Poland.

GSSR students in years 1, 2 and 3 (i.e. admitted under the 2018 Law on Higher Education and Science), and enrolled in the specialization, are eligible to apply for NAWA STER funding to intern with an NGO in Ireland and access the TCD library. Selection is competitive, following a Call for applications that GSSR will distribute in the Spring semester 2022.

Course Objectives

This course aims to provide both theoretical and practical knowledge about the NGO sector and its role in development processes, democratization, and the promotion and defence of human rights. Course participants can also gain hands-on experience and build their CVs by cooperating with selected NGOs in Poland or Ireland.

Simultaneously, the specialization seeks to foster academic professionalization skills. Students have the opportunity to present their research - depending on their internship placement - at a seminar (or webinar) that GSSR, the National University of Ireland – Galway, or the Development Studies Association, Ireland, organize.

Requirements, Policies on Attendance, Late Materials, and Make-Up

To successfully complete the theoretical part of the Specialization, students have to:

- Actively participate in at least 14 of the 15 sets of classes. If possible, classes will take place in person. Students who must quarantine should inform the lecturer at least 24 hours in advance, so that hybrid classes can be organized.
- To facilitate in-class discussion, read the course material by the dates assigned;
- Write two reaction papers of 2000-2500 words each on topics agreed with Prof. Chimiak and Grabowska, respectively. Guidelines will be distributed in class. For due dates, see Time Outline table. Late submission of papers results in having to write a longer reaction paper, i.e. 500 additional words per week's delay.
- Prepare a creative academic output (e.g. zine, poem, video, presentation) which details are agreed with Prof. Khoo. Guidelines will be distributed in class. For the due date, see Time Outline table.

Students who are missing two classes without adequate justification must write a 1000-word essay on a topic given by the lecturer, to be delivered electronically by May 31, 2022.

Specialization students who opt for internships with NGOs must provide an NGO placement report to the course instructors within one month of completing the internship. The 500-800 words' report presents the activities undertaken by the student during their internship and briefly discusses if and how the internship strengthened their know-how and competences.

Grading

Grades for the specialization course will be based: 15% on Class participation, 85% on reaction papers and academic output.

Specialization students receive 30 h credit toward graduation of the course.

Students who successfully complete an internship receive a Certificate issued by the NGO they interned with, and 10 h of academic credit.
